

This is the opening paragraph of a short synthetic story used only to exercise the page-break margin heuristic in doc2html. It has enough text to establish a stable body font size for the page.

The old traveller walked along the dusty road for a very long time, thinking about everything that had happened since he left his home village many years before, and about all the people he had met along the way, some kind and some cruel, but each one leaving a mark upon his memory that he would carry with him always as he finally caught sight of the distant town, tired but relieved that his journey was finally at an end.

He sat down upon a low stone wall near the gate and rested there for a while, watching the last light fade from the evening sky and listening to the distant sound of bells ringing somewhere beyond the rooftops, calling the faithful home before nightfall settled over everything.

In the morning he would seek out an old friend he had not seen in many years, hoping that time had been kind to him as it had, in its own strange way, been kind to the traveller himself despite all the hardship of the road.